   ➢ If you do not have one of the above samples, please respond to the prompt below in 750 – 1,000 words:
     Decision-making has been characterized as the heart of educational leadership. Yet, how school and district leaders identify what issues to address, with whom to work with them on, and on which resources they draw to inform their thinking, is less well understood. In many ways, this is true because the contexts of school and district leadership vary so greatly. Using your professional context as your foundation:
     1. Identify what you believe to be a substantive concern/issue/problem for your school and/or district.
     2. Describe why it is a concern and what kinds of formal and informal data inform your understanding of this issue.
     3. Discuss your school/district’s current response and who is engaged in that work.
     4. Describe the resources (e.g. readings, professional learning/development, community resources and/or consultants) your school/district is drawing on to address the issue.
     5. Conclude with what might be a positive and appropriate resolution.
     Citations to readings and research are welcomed but not required.

4. Up-to-Date Resume listing your current professional position

5. Copies of currently held education certificates (all certificates can be included as one email attachment)

If you are a student who lives 50+ miles from a WSU campus (aka, “remote-site students”) you can attend classes via Zoom provided you:

- submit a “Tech Checklist” well before the start of the semester verifying you have a device and Wi-Fi access that meets WSU’s specifications for consistent and reliable connection to classes.
